High Frontier Director General Daniel Graham (U.S.A., Ret.) announced February 16 that his group plans an extensive media campaign "to alert the citizens of our nation to the urgent need for a High Frontier system in space." Graham said his group will mail upwards of 15 million letters to "concerned persons throughout the country" in 1984, in addition to distributing about five million books on the so-called "Star Wars" defense system and producing a 30-minute film on the topic later this year.

High Frontier also plans to make available to TV stations and other media outlets tapes showing a fast-moving clip of mechanics, weaponry and devices that could be used in building space-based defenses. It also includes a simulated version of what would likely occur after the U.S. learns of a Soviet attack, and excerpts from President Reagan's speech on space defense.

The organization will also provide a 30-minute program on the issue entitled "Counterpoint: Future of Deterrence." The show features a debate on the subject between Gen. Graham and former CIA Director Adm. Stansfield Turner. The debate, produced for the Shavano Institute, will soon air on many PBS stations.
